Mini Cupcakes & Conversations Teaches About Self-Love & Healthy Relationships; Teens Begin Self-Love Journey

About 25 teen girls turned out to attend two coaching workshops for a two-part Mini Cupcakes and Conversation in February on self-love and healthy relationships with Self-Love and Relationship Coach Dee Jay.

The first interactive workshop was held February 18th titled “I Definitely Love Me” and used coaching exercises to help the teens become more self-aware. Exercises included a writing exercise and discussion about what they love about themselves along with a handout that they can use for the next 39 days to start their Self-Love journeys. Each day they were challenged to write down something that they love about themselves.

The second workshop on February 25th was titled “What Does That Relationship Do?” It shed light on the components of a healthy relationship. Because 1 in 3 teens experience dating violence, the workshop was timely. February is Teen Dating Violence Awareness Month. Coach Dee provided various scenarios that the teens had an opportunity to discuss and decide whether it was healthy or unhealthy. She also provided a healthy relationship quiz that the young ladies got an opportunity to take. Coach Dee stressed that self-love is the foundation of a healthy relationship with boundaries at any age and provided an exercise to help the teens determine their boundaries.

“Self-love should definitely be taught in schools. There is a direct correlation between how youth feel about themselves and what they believe they deserve. If you don't think you are special you will not require being treated with respect,” said Coach Dee. “I am passionate about making sure that every young girl that I come in contact with understands what makes her special, what makes her amazing!”

Each teen received a cupcake with a self-love message at the end of the discussions. The teens also recited a self-love pledge.
